The transition from school towards adulthood involves many people not least families. The role we play is invaluable, and looking at what others have done can make us feel better equipped to support our young person in their decision making. In this talk I will share my experiences and the things I wish I had known.

Learning outcomes:

- To be able to understand the need for a clear vision.

- To be able to assess the options.
- To be able to compare the importance of attitude and ability.
- To be able to examine progress made to guide future planning.

Graham is a parent of a daughter with additional needs and has firsthand experience navigating many of the challenges that other parents face when transitioning their child from school to the next stage of life.

Supporting Emotional Regulation in Autistic Children: Strategies for Co-Regulation, Self-Regulation, and Sensory Needs

Cynthia Gouveia Caria,
Outreach Consultant
BeyondAutism

Emotional regulation is essential to the well-being of all children but can pose as a barrier for autistic children who may require tailored approaches that consider sensory processing differences, a preference for routine, among other factors.

This seminar offers parents, professionals and educator's practical strategies for understanding and supporting emotional regulation through proactive, individualised methods.

Participants will explore how sensory processing differences impact emotional states and learn to apply co-regulation strategies as a foundation for self-regulation. They will also gain insight into the behaviour cycle and understand how the Zones of Regulation framework can build emotional awareness while guiding the creation of personalised regulation 'toolboxes'.

By integrating these strategies and focusing on language and validation, attendees will leave with the ability to help children navigate emotional challenges effectively, promoting greater independence and resilience.

Empowering Talent:
How Zebedee is changing the face of media

It was a simple walk down the beach that sparked a lightbulb moment for sisters-in-law Laura Johnson and Zoe Proctor—one that would go on to reshape the media and fashion worlds and we wanted to change this.” said Laura.

“Before we launched, there were very few agencies and clients that would consider disabled talent, and this felt very wrong. As soon as we had the idea, we knew that an inclusive agency was a much-needed addition to the industry, and we would do everything we could to get disability included in diversity conversations and actions.”

Driven by a mission to break stereotypes, they took proactive steps—reaching out to local disability groups and setting up social media accounts to attract talent. The name “Zebedee” was chosen by Zoe’s performing arts club—a play with the letter z and also inspired by a cheerful, spring-loaded character from The Magic Roundabout, symbolizing resilience and joy, much like the agency’s spirit. Their persistence paid off, as they gradually built relationships with casting directors, pitching Zebedee talent even when disability wasn’t specifically sought after in roles.

Zebedee’s big breakthrough came when their talent began landing major campaigns, such as Gucci Beauty ad featuring Elle Goldstein, a model with Down’s syndrome. This milestone was followed by another high-profile gig when Lenny and Willow, babies with Down’s syndrome, starred in a Pura baby wipes ad, fulfilling Laura and Zoe’s dream of seeing young disabled talent, holding mainstream campaigns.

“Before we launched, we had discussed what success would look like in terms of impact in the industry. Zoe imagined a high-profile fashion campaign, whereas I, a new mum, really wanted to see inclusive baby products (at that time there had been disabled baby nappy packaging featuring a disabled baby). The summer 2020 this was realised with Elle and Lenny and Willow booked these jobs and we could not have been happier!”

Image credit: Tilly Moore

Despite successes, the journey has not been without obstacles. Some casting calls and venues remain inaccessible, making the audition process challenging for their clients. Nonetheless, Zebedee’s impact has only grown, now representing over 2000 models and actors globally and continuing to champion a world where beauty and talent are authentically diverse.

“The global population with a disability is thought to be around 20%, and we will not stop until advertising is representative of this.”

“We want our talent to feature across all media platforms as models, actors, content creators and more. We also now represent creatives and consultants and are taking our first steps into production ourselves.”
